Motivation and Goal for Creating an Undated Planner

The motivation for creating an undated planner is to have an easier way to manage my goals and priorities. The book will contain a section about philosophy of setting goals before the section with the undated planner. A published book will save time spent writing the formats on a blank 8.5" by 11" sheet of paper, will serve as an inexpensive, easy-to-use, undated planner which I can purchase at any time and start on any date. The goal of creating an undated planner is to create an outline to contain a list of goals for each week, month, quarter, and year. Anyone can pick up a copy of Plan for an Ethical Life and start when they want. This planner contains my philosophy in the sections that follow. I do not intend to claim to be a good person or live an ethical life. I act as if I could do good and live an ethical life.

Inspiration in My Life

I began practicing spirituality in 2019 after a friend, Aspasia, recommended I practice mindfulness to detach from anxiety and intrusive thoughts. "You are enough. You are not your mind. You are not your body." I learned mindfulness from an app, FitMind, available on iPhone and Android, at Aspasia's recommendation. FitMind provided me with guided Buddhist meditations. One of the most helpful practices to improve my well-being, beyond practicing Buddhist spirituality, has been practicing Stoicism which teaches students to live in accordance with virtues and values by planning goals based on those virtues and values. I learned the importance of spiritual, mental, physical, financial, career, educational, relationship, and other miscellaneous goals.

I began to practice the four Stoic virtues of courage, temperance, wisdom, and justice in 2019. I learned Stoicism from Daily Stoic from Ryan Holiday and from four books: Meditations by Marcus Aurelius, published by Modern Library, Discourses by Epictetus, published by Penguin Classics, Letters from a Stoic by Seneca, published by Penguin Classics, and Lectures and Sayings by Musonius Rufus published by William B. Irvine. I practice an additional virtue of kindness which I believe is a core part of my identity. I love myself and accept human nature, hope for today, respect each individual, empower everyone, and build community to practice virtue. I learned more practical actions to live in accordance with these virtues from Make Your Bed by Admiral McRaven, Daily Stoic from Ryan Holiday, The 5AM Club by Robin Sharma, and 12 Rules for Life by Dr. Jordan B. Peterson. I practiced this technique of prioritizing virtues and values, planning goals, and tracking goals for about 7 years.

Introduction to Phoenix Philosophy

Spirituality

I started practicing spirituality by practicing mindfulness meditation. For example, I see my right hand. I exist separate from my right hand. Therefore, I am not my right hand. I see my right arm. I exist separate from my right arm. Therefore, I am not my right arm. This logic applies to the rest of the body.

I started mindfulness meditation and detachment from my mind and body in 2019 when I had an ileostomy. I saw an inch of my small intestine stuck out of my abdomen. I realized I was not my small intestine. Crohn's Disease affected my small intestine. Therefore, I was not Crohn's Disease. This was the largest revelation I experienced up to that moment in my life. The only thing to surpass this revelation was when I detached further from my body and mind.

I saw my body and realized I was not my body. My mind existed, and still exists, inside my body. Therefore, I was not my mind. Thoughts float through the mind like clouds float through the sky. Therefore, I was not thoughts. Emotions are natural reactions to stimuli which flow through body. Therefore, I was not emotions. I began to detach from the pain I experienced in my body and the thoughts of suicide that raced through my mind. I detached from my body and mind.

If I am not my mind and body, then what am I? I am a spirit with a connection to this body which enables me to experience the physical world. I am enough.

Virtues

What is the right way to live my life? How can I be the person I wish I had when I experienced so much pain, which I believed was unbearable at each moment? I wanted to become the person I wish I had in each moment I experienced pain because I wished someone helped me when my dad yelled at me when I was 5 years old, kids bullied me throughout my time in school, my neighbor attempted to murder me twice, family yelled at me, I had an ileostomy due to Crohn's Disease, or any other time in my life when I felt lonely.

Virtue, as a noun, is a set of behaviors necessary to do good, what is right, or what is ethical. As a noun, you can not do virtue, you can act with virtue. There exists a difference between what you do and the good.

Good

Nouns and adjectives in bold font and verbs with an underline in the paragraph below serve as a visual aid of the good versus how to act.

The good, as in a good deed, good action, or good behavior, is the way you do something. Stoicism teaches students to act with courage, temperance, wisdom, and justice. You can do a courageous, temperate, wise, or just deed. You can not courage, courageous, temperance, temperate, wisdom, wise, justice, and/or just anything. Nouns are persons, places, things, or objects. Adjectives describe nouns. Verbs are actions you can do.

1. Courage is the ability to act with forethought, or a plan, toward a valuable goal. Courage enables you to act despite the risk associated with failure. Cowardice is an imbalance of too much forethought where you overthink things with little to no action toward a goal. Foolishness is the opposite of little to no forethought or planning with too much action or to quick to action. Courage is the golden mean of cowardice and foolishness.

2. Temperance is the balance of a mindset or view of a problem. Focus on what is within your power, instead of what is beyond you. Whoever controls what you value, controls you. If you value money, i.e. chase or hoard money, then whoever controls money controls you. Greed will enable you to violate ethics and commit evil.

3. Wisdom is the ability to accurately interpret the reality of the situation.

4. Justice is the treatment of everyone as fellow humans like fellow citizens in a city, neighbors in a neighborhood, or family members in a family. Justice is the culmination of the other virtues into the ideal society. Do the right thing no matter how difficult or the risk to oneself while understanding the reality of the situation with a balanced mind, forethought, and plan.

To do a good deed, you must focus on what is within your power. Your will, as your faculty of reason, is the only thing within your power. How you use your capacity to reason and what you choose to do in response to events determines whether you do good or evil.

Evil

Evil is the desire for power over factors external of your will. Yelling or screaming at, berating, hitting, beating, or chasing someone are signs of your desire for power over them and the situation. You can not control what happens because what happens is influenced by your actions, other people's actions, and other factors beyond any person's control, such as a natural disaster, genetics, status at birth and more. You can influence externals through how you behave, but you can not control anyone else. Given the inability to control anyone, trying to exert power over someone else is evil.

Externals

Externals are anything external of your will and, therefore, indifferent to ethics. You do not need wealth, health, status, fame, or anything else external of your power to do good. A janitor can do good by cleaning a mess. A janitor can do evil by hitting someone with a mop. A billionaire can do good by donating money to charity. A billionaire can do evil by enslaving people to acquire those billions of dollars.

Values

To value a virtue means to act in accordance with that virtue. You can act with courage, temperance, wisdom and justice, or you can act in a courageous, temperate, wise, or just manner. What should I value to act in a virtuous manner? I reflected on my life about what I wished didn't happen, what I wanted to happen differently, how I wish I would have acted differently, how my family and friends would have treated me, and what I can do years later and next time. I concluded I will love myself and humanity by accepting human nature, hope for today, respect each individual, empower everyone, and build community. The list below contains my five values.

1. Love is to accept what is within my power, which is my will, and to accept responsibility for my response.
2. Hope is to act as if things are the way they are meant to be and that you are fine no matter what happens. You are enough.
3. Respect is to treat each individual as autonomous with emotions and thoughts and agency, the capacity to decide how they respond.
4. Empower is to educate each individual of the good and how to act good and encourage each individual to believe they are enough.
5. Build community is to unite individuals to form a more just society. Each of us has a responsibility as an individual to collaborate with our families, friends, neighbors, community members, and fellow citizens of a city, state, country, and the world.

I identified these virtues and values by reading texts about ethics, philosophy, and religion. I tested actions from stories that seemed practical. I noticed improvement in my health and way of life as a result of acting in accordance with these values and virtues. I noticed my heart rate slowed and tension in my chest, shoulders, and hips decreased. I describe these neutral sensations as feeling safe.

The importance of how you respond does not imply pain, illness, or any other problem is your fault. For example, there is no known cause or cure for Crohn's Disease, according to my gastroenterologist. Therefore, I did not cause the existence of Crohn's Disease. It's not my fault.

Emotions

Emotions are natural reactions to your perceptions of reality. Emotions are real in the sense that they exist. They represent a by-product of how you perceive events, which makes them different than the event. I use the following order from event to response to choose how to respond. In Man's Search for Meaning, Viktor Frankl wrote, "Between stimulus and response is an opportunity to choose how to respond."

Event: What happened?

Stimulus: The way the event is transmitted to your senses.

Sense: You can see, smell, taste, touch, and hear the stimulus.

Impression: What is your first opinion of what happened?

Emotional Reaction: The body's natural reaction to impressions.

Reflection: Think about how you feel. What emotion do you feel? Is the impression an accurate representation of reality? The ability to test an impression is one of the most important skills to develop.

Choice: You choose how you respond, what you do, and whether you act based on values and ethics.

Response: The action in response to the choices you make.

How to Connect Values and Goals?

In Nicomachean Ethics by Aristotle, published by Signet Classics, Aristotle wrote about the connection between the good and actions. In short, all actions aim toward some good. All goods aim toward the highest good.

A virtue, is something with which you act to do good. Stoicism teaches students to act with courage, temperance, wisdom, and justice which are four virtues among others from Nicomachean Ethics. You can not do those four virtues. In addition to the four Stoic virtues, I concluded kindness is at the core of my sense of self.

To value something, you must do something with virtue. For example, I can love myself and humanity, which requires the five virtues because of the risks associated with the potential for harm from abuse, neglect, or manipulation.

A valuable action is an action based on a virtue. A goal must incorporate one or more valuable actions with one or more virtues. You can think of goals with valuable actions as valuable goals or value-based goals. A valueless, or evil, goal is a goal involving a desire for power over factors external of your power. I don't want to teach you how to do evil, but I suspect you understand the point that acts of evil require you to lie, cheat, steal, manipulate, etc.

How to Create Goals?

Goals must be specific, measurable, attainable, relevant, and timely (SMART) goals in order to do good.

Specific: Specify a goal by stating what you want to do. Use an action verb for something within your power to accomplish. You can sleep, eat, walk, run, apply for a job, or bring a horse to water. You can not save the world, change someone's mind, or make a horse drink water.

Measurable: Measure a goal by quantifying your actions. You can track how many hours you sleep, the amount of macronutrients and micronutrients you consume, how far you walk or run, how often you email that colleague who seems to never do their tasks, etc.

Attainable: Attain a goal by focusing on what is within your power. You can control how you communicate, what you say, your tone and pitch of voice, and body language. You can not make someone else do something. You can not convince them to do something. They have to want to do something.

Relevant: A relevant goal must connect to what you value.

Timely: Timeliness requires a realistic deadline which you can learn from experience. If you do not know the amount of time to accomplish a goal, such as the amount of time to write a 10-page paper for a course in college or school, you can track how long you write a 10-page paper for the current assignment. Then, you can adjust goals as you learn.

Track your goal by writing the goal, setting an alarm, or setting reminders in your calendar on paper or your phone. You can find which method works for you by using SMART goals to track which method helps you better stay on track with accomplishing goals.

SMART Goal Example 1:

Sleep for 8 hours each night this week from 10:00pm to 6:00am.

Specific: This SMART goal includes the hours for when you want to sleep.

Measurable: You can measure the amount of hours you sleep and when you fall asleep and wake up.

Attainable: I assume you work a typical 8-5 and want time before you leave for work to prepare for the day. You can even set a goal to track how much time you need to prepare before work, then use that to determine the timeliness of this goal.

Relevant: This goal could be relevant to what you value, such as sleeping enough to be your best self and better care for your family.

Timely: This goal is timely because it specifies the timeline for this goal, which is this week.

Success of a Goal

What determines the success of a goal? Success is the accomplishment of a goal. In SMART Goal Example 1, if you sleep for 8 hours during 5 nights this week from 10:00pm to 6:00am, then you accomplished 5/7 of the goal. That could be an improvement compared to the previous week in which you slept for 5-7 hours each night. Progress, not perfection.

Priorities

I prioritize goals by treating them as building blocks or steps with objectives that build to higher goals. When goals compete for my time, I reference the Eisenhower Matrix to prioritize goals based on matters of urgency and importance.

Urgency is a matter of time sensitivity. Things that need to be done by a deadline and can not be changed are urgent.

Importance is a matter of value. When I value something, that means I do that action with virtue. Reference the section Value to learn more about values. The more valuable a goal is, the more important it is.

I learned this technique from a video on YouTube about the Eisenhower Matrix from 7 Habits of Highly Effective People by Stephen R. Covey.

Eisenhower Matrix

	Important	Unimportant
Urgent	Prioritize over other tasks and goals. If it is an emergency, then do it now, else, plan it before other tasks.	Delegate a task or goal to someone else who values this urgent matter, or do it anyway, even though you may dislike doing it. Someone needs to do it.
Not Urgent	Plan when to do this. What gets scheduled gets accomplished. What gets measured gets maintained.	No worries if you do not do these tasks or do not accomplish these goals. You can move them to next week or next month if something more urgent or important comes up. Be flexible with this category.

Track Goals

I write next to each goal I did not accomplish why I did not accomplish it. I write whether the goal was urgent, important, both, or neither next to the goal I did not accomplish and whether the cause of not doing it was within my control or out of my control. For example, if I call a doctor to schedule a follow-up appointment, but they do not answer my call or return a call from my voicemail, then I will mark that goal as urgent and important, but out of my control for that day. I move the task or goal to the next time period.

I use the following short-hand notation:

Urgency, Importance, and Responsibility	Short-hand Notation
Out of my Control	OC
In my Control	IC
Urgent and Important	UI
Urgent and Unimportant	UU
Not Urgent and Important	NUI
Not Urgent and Unimportant	NUUI

Learn from Experience

What if you do not accomplish a goal as well as you wanted? You can learn from experience. Reflecting at regular intervals, such as each morning on your quality of sleep and the night before, as well as the prior week and the week in advance, can enable you to learn what you liked and disliked about any aspect of the goal, routine, habit, or other aspect of your goal.

The Ultimate Reward from Success

The important part of setting a goal and accomplishing that goal is to give your word to yourself and keep it. The ultimate reward is building trust with yourself. To trust yourself means to believe when you give your word that you expect you will do something then reflect to learn from experience.

Examples of How I Use This Planner

You may use this journal by deciding on what you want to value and with which virtues you want to act. You may fill in the blank at the top of the page with the date, week, month, quarter, or year. You may fill in the blanks next to the categories with what you want to prioritize during that time period. I prefer to prioritize spiritual, mental, physical, financial, career and educational, and miscellaneous goals, in that order. I include relationship goals, hobbies, and other interests or less urgent or important tasks in the miscellaneous category. I aim for 3 goals per category for a total of 15 goals per month. I consider the amount of time for each goal in a weekly list of goals which follows the monthly list of goals. My goals for the day, week, month, quarter, and year, depend on the other time periods. After I complete a goal, I mark a check to the left of the line. Also, I write due dates for the task to the left of the line. I typed the dates in the examples to the right for formatting reasons in Google Doc and Microsoft Word. You may choose categories as you see fit. I use the template below.

About Chad W. Thomas

Chad W. Thomas researches public health and behavioral health funded by the NIH, SAMHSA, and FDA with three scholarly publications. Chad's current research focuses on connecting people to housing, substance use recovery services, and therapy. Chad graduated cum laude in three years with a Bachelor of Science in Economics with a minor in Mathematics and a minor in Statistics from Florida State University in 2018. In his free time, he reads philosophy to learn how to improve his integrity and apply lessons from experience with Crohn's Disease and an impoverished childhood. He strives to be the person he wished he had during hardship.
